the Southern men have avowed themselves mation. over the increased value which the passage of the Free coinage bill will give to the Western ellver mines, and the wealth which will be gained by their constituents, who are mine owners. As soon as the bill passes, if it does pass, every 41234 grains of silver bullion they possess will be worth one silver dollar, and, in consequence, the price of their silver product will be materially enhanced.

While this is the main concern of the sil ver Senators, the Senators from the East are actuated by very different motives. The West is the debtor of the East, and the which was loased in the first instance. The East, therefore, will as earnestly oppose the free coinage of the 412% grain dol. lar as the silver men will advocate it, an the contest between them must be pro-

There does not seem, therefore, that the Silver bill will so easily be disposed of, and by the time it is finally acted on, the ses sion will be considerably further advance than it is at present. In fact the question with which the majority will then be confronted will be "whether it will be better to insist longer upon the passage of the Force bill, which the people have already condemned, with the certainty glance into the future?" Does our brother compelling an extra session of the Fifty-second Congress, or whether it ways at once, backward and forward at the will be better to consider the necessary ap. same moment? propriation bills, and so avoid the expense and responsibility of such extra session?

The conservative element of the Republi. can party will certainly decide to take the last mentioned horn of the dilemma, and so the Force bill may be considered as practi-

NEW HOTEL PROPOSITION

There are several kinds of property this community which are worthy of th special attention of the capitalist, not so much on account of what they are now, as on account of what they are certain to become under the influence of a general expansion in the wealth and population of Richmond and incidentally of the State and the South.

These forms of property are, speaking in general, those that depend upon the publi at large for their advance in value. As ou population increases in number and come into the possession of more abundan pecuniary means, these special forms of property must necessarily not only rise in actual value, but also widen in the extent of the profit which they hold out for the

This truth, and the history of every great city in the North and West shows it t be such, has a direct application to the real estate of Richmond and its vicinity; but it has a special application to the proposition of building a great hotel here which will be distinguished for every metrepolitan convenience and appointment.

This proposition has been agitated for many years, only to collapse in complete failure, but the reasons which suggested the proposition increase rather than deoline in force. Every year that passe without the hotel being erected, only make the success of the experiment more assured when it is once undertaken.

The silver Senators are chiefly concerned warning them that the lottery is not dead; warning them that the lottery is not dead; that the managers are counting confidently on eventually securing repeal of the anti-lottery postal laws, and that their plans are lottery postal laws, and that their plans are that the managers are counting confidently lottery postal laws, and that their plans are to carry on their business more extensively to carry on their business more extensively than ever. To effectually checkmate all such schemes, the committee urge upon the people of the United States and their Senators and Representatives in Congress, to enact a constitutional amendment which shall prohibit any State from chartering or countenancing a lottery company. Such an amendment would no doubt easily pass to concress by two-thirds, majority in both longress by two-thirds' majority in both ouses, unless lottery gold should manage to get in its baleful work, and if it did money back in a coin equal in value to that it would be premptly ratified by threeourths of the States.

THE FORCE BILL.

The ardent and sanguine friends of the Force bill have not yet abandoned hope of the United States passage. According to our Washington correspondent they are claiming that, although now put aside in favor of the Silver bill, its consideration is only deferred, and that as soon as the Silver bill be disposed of, which they claim will be again taken up and kept before the Senate until it is passed. There are even hints of a deal having been made to the silver sheems, the former till, in their silver schemes, the former till, it is making in public sceem, as well as the bodies and the schemes, the former till will be again taken up and kept before the Senate untill it is passed. There are even billiston to some till schemes, the former till, will be again taken up and kept before the Senate in their silver schemes, the former will, in turn, assist the latter in getting through their pet measure.

There is very little likelihood of there being any truth whatever in this reputed deal. It is far more likely that the silver men will look to the Southern Senators for assistance than to the East, since many of the Southern men have avowed themselves already in favor of free coinage. But, apart from all this, it is hard to see how such a possibly be railroaded through that body.

How to Saddle a Horse.

In the hour of his defeat as a candidate for the Presidency in opposition to Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Blaine telegraphed from Augusta to his supporter in New York, "Claim everything," and was then forced to back down in complete contusion, atripped of every pretension to success in the election which had then only recently taken place.

In the Behring Sea controversy Mr. Blaine is simply repeating this absurd episode in his past political history. He began by claiming everything for the Government which he represented; then he receded from his position that Behring Sea was a mare clausum, and now he rejuctantly admits his readliness to submit the points in dispute to arbitration. Holding an untenable position in the beginning, he has been compelled to give way with mortification to himself and humilistion to the American peeple.

The Bible Record and Monuments.

Already Assyriologists and Egyptologists have exhumed remarkable proofs of the historical credibility of the Old Testament writings. Passages unconfirmed by previous knowledge, and dogmatically propounced erroneous by confident critics have been proved to be minutely accurate Every year supplies missing links in the chains of proofs that the historical books of the Jews, considered as documents of the Jews, considered as documents when the Egyptian monuments make is clear that the story of the stay in Egypt and of the exponse and desert wandering must have been written by a contemporary who was thoroughly lamitian with the The Bible Record and Monuments who was thoroughly lamitar with Egypt of that day. Later discove give equal confirmation to other norical books—Judges, Samuel story of Melenizedek. Other tablets four at the same place, and coming from the same source, contain herdental confirma-tions of the Scripture narratives that re-quire some technical knowledge to be ap-preciated. Scholars will award them a ver-nigh value. Professor Sayce concludes his article, printed in the Sunday-School Times, with this inference from these dis-coveries:

coveries:
These (tablets) have taught us the great lesson that the Israelites, when they left Egypt and entered Canaan, were surrounded on all sides by literary nations, and that the cities of the exactly they occupied were stocked with books. It is no longer possible to maintain that the early records of the Old Testament must have been derived from tradition, and not from written documents, and are consequently not deserving of more faith than tradition usually is. The Babylonian monuments have shown us that the on of the Scriptural narrative vonfirmed for us in the same way regress of archaelegical discovery in 1 ist.—New York Examiner (Baptist).

Holmes on Literary Aspirants. Holmes on Literary Aspirants.

My Dear Madame:—I am always very willing to read any specimens of verse sent me by literary aspirants, and I shall be ready to do for you what I have done for scores—to speak moderately—of others. At the same time I have to confess that my experience has been very discouraging. Poetic sensibility and an ear for thyme and retythm are very commen gifts, and are very often mistaken for poetic genius by those who possess them and their friends. You can well imagine that it is not a very agreeable task to undeceive those who have been flattered into the idea that they possessed extraordinary powers. Yet this is what I have to do habitually, unless I choose to keep up the illusion and betray my correspondents into false expectations. I am not an editor, and have no connection with any periodical except as a contributor. Whenever any correspondents wish to have their commandications published, I send them to the editor of any periodical they designate, and leave all the test to him, taking it for granted that he knows what will suit his purpose tetter than I.do.

that will suit his purpose better that what will suit his purpose tenter than I do.

I am sorry to say that the poems and stories sent through me are almost invariably declined. You will ask why? It is because they e me from this or that section of the country? By no means. Mr. Howells, from one of the Western States, Bret Harte, from California, were eagerly welcomed, while picnty of Eastern writers had their pieces rejected by our publishers. Is it, then, because they are new and unknown to fatne? No; the real reason is that new writer, match themselves against those who

I have written you much more fully that I have written you much more fully than I commonly dr, and more at length than I should expect to again. But I do not wish you to be disappointed. Your letter is frank and fair, and you have your chances of success like another. But of the hundreds of thousands of poems that are written by our educated and intelligent ladies very few are marketable, or remembered a week after they are published. I am afraid you winot be made happier by my criticism, but I am, nevertheless, yours very sincerely, "OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES."
